INCOMPAS Thanks FCC Commissioner Clyburn for Service, Celebrates Exalted Career

WASHINGTON, D.C. (April 17, 2018) – Today, Commissioner Mignon Clyburn announced that she is retiring from the Federal Communications Commission (FCC).

INCOMPAS CEO Chip Pickering released the following statement in response:

“Competition and consumers have had no better champion than Commissioner Clyburn. She is a fighter filled with grace, substance and passion, who has truly earned the title of the ‘Consumer Commissioner’.

“Her presence on the FCC as a genuine consensus builder will be missed. During her time as interim chairwoman of the Commission she always strove to move the FCC’s agenda forward with a keen eye toward technology that lifts the boats of all consumers.

“Our nation owes a debt of gratitude to Commissioner Clyburn for being a true competition hero. We thank her for her years of laudatory service.”
